Q: How can I get Jmeter to run in the background? I have been trying for a while now to use Jmeter so I can test some Java applications while doing other things. In particular, I am trying to use an application called Jetty in Jmeter, and the following HTML script: var mailclient = new javax.mail.Session("smtp.gmail.com","my_email","my_password"); mailclient.setDebug(true); mailclient.setMessageFactory(new Packages.com.sun.mail.smtp.SMTPSendFailedException ("java.net.SocketException: Failed to connect to server")); mailclient.connect(); var mailstring="testing"... This works perfectly if I run Jmeter in the command line, but Jmeter does not work if I try to launch it via the standard web browser (chrome, firefox, opera, explorer). The only way I have been able to get it to work is to start Jmeter and leave it sitting and running in the command line. I would like to do the rest of my work, and then launch Jmeter from the command line so that it can carry on running. I thought I was able to do this by adding -Djmeter.save.saveservice.output_format=xml in the Jmeter command line, but this doesn't work. When I look at my Jmeter directory, it looks like this: Jmeter-3.0\bin\jmeter.log Jmeter-3.0\bin\samples Jmeter-3.0\bin\lib Jmeter-3.0\bin\jmeter.war Jmeter-3.0\bin\lib\jmeter-plugins.jar

Nick Turse, an independent journalist and member of The Intercept's investigative reporting team, recently traveled to Syria to report on the militants' "Sharia Police" and their role in the human rights abuses of the civil war. The reporter spoke with Al-Monitor about his experiences. What follows is an edited version of their conversation. Al-Monitor: Why did you decide to go to Syria? Advertisement Nick Turse: I've been in the region of Northeast Africa since 2013 and visited the West Bank, Yemen and Gaza. Most recently, in mid-May I visited Morocco, but after a few days I wanted to travel back home to the U.S. and try to get to Syria. The first problem was that my visa wasn't clear enough for Jordan. But then I got to Turkey, and my Jordanian visa was clear enough to go. I took a flight to Istanbul and changed flights there to Amman. But that took a few days because two days into the trip I was like, I'm going to Syria. I had been reading about the Kurds and their humanitarian situation and feeling sort of angry about what the U.S. was doing, which was basically putting the blame on them and essentially telling the Kurds to deal with ISIS. So I made the decision that I would go to Syria and see for myself what was happening there and see what other people were saying. When I arrived in Syria on May 20 and drove to Afrin, which is the area the Kurds are trying to take control over, it seemed that things were good. The people were very friendly. The Kurdish fighters, the People's Protection Units [YPG], were all over the place. There were miles of burning tires of Peshmerga burned on the main street in the city where they have liberated the city. It seemed like a great city. Then I went over the river and when I got to the other side, things were a little odd. It seemed like it wasn't really controlled by the YPG. There was an ISIS logo with a star in the middle. It was just a little bit of an odd situation. After that, I went to Aleppo. What I witnessed there was pretty shocking. There were whole cities and towns that had totally been destroyed. It looked like it hadn't been bombed by any aircrafts, but by some kind of explosive. If there were any kind of war crimes that had
