Lake Kondakai Lake Kondakai (,, ,,,,) is a saline alkaline lake situated in the south-eastern part of Abkhazia and some islets from its eastern shore. It has an area of and a maximum depth of (or), and is the fourth largest lake in Georgia. History Kondakai was formed by the creation of the Dzidzera (the "Upper Amba") valley, a rift in the Apkhazeti Ridge, during the Eocene. Through the Miocene the valley became filled up by a glacial lake, which was fed by a number of tributaries: the Shoria in the west, the Kanchara to the north, and the Kani to the east. The lake was initially covered by freshwater, then increasingly by brackish water, with the marine elements introduced by the Shoria stream. The Kani - Shoria-Kanchara system has an approximate area of, making it the largest known lake in Abkhazia. The lake is known in the local Abkhaz language as (Upper Amba). The landscape of the northern part of the lake is dominated by the flat oval Rhipi Island, which has a mean elevation of. The island is known in Abkhaz as (), and as in Russian; in Georgian it is known as. Flora and fauna Fish and crustaceans are abundant in the lake; specimens of the barbel (Lepidobrama limanda) and carp (Cyprinus carpio) have been found there. The lake abounds in various species of saline insects. A large number of species of living molluscs have also been found there. The Vakhjurgan mountains are situated to the south of the lake, and there are various species of plants of the former terrane of the Vakhjurgan Depression.
