Q: Why won't jQuery's.height() work for me? I have some (relatively simple) Javascript to control the height of a set of menu bars when they are shown/hidden: `$('.button').css('background-color','red'); $('.button').mouseenter(function() { $(this).css('background-color', 'yellow'); });`

`$('.button').mouseleave(function() { $(this).css('background-color','red'); });`; `$('.button').click(function() { //do stuff });`; There are two buttons in a form which will do this to the left and right, plus there is a container div. The container's height is dynamic and it's only the buttons in the form which are dynamic. If I use this css: `#container { height:100%; }` I want both buttons to be 100% of the height of the div they are in, so it looks like I have to make the div's height 100%. From the example above, I'd expect that if I change `#container's` height to 100%, and then set both `#button1` and `#button2's` height to 100%, when the mouse enters they will be 100% of their containers' height, and when the mouse leaves they will be 100% of their containers' height. However, only one of them works. I've also tried increasing the container's `margin:0; padding:0; height;` and `width` to increase its size, then the buttons will (using chrome) fill 100% the width and height of the container when they are red, but will only fill 50% the width and height of the container if they are yellow. Why is this? If I don't increase the size of the container, neither will work. 6d1f23a050
