Further, the invention relates to a laser dicing tape. Recently, in the field of the electronics, the electronics parts, which are the semiconductors, have been thinned and the wirings thereof are decreased in width. Thereby, electrostatic damage to an electronic circuit board will be increased when the electronic circuit board is taken out of a product. Therefore, improvement has been required in the assembling process for the electronic circuit board. In order to prevent a short circuit due to a solder alloy or to reduce environmental damage such as bowing due to difference in coefficient of thermal expansion between the electronic circuit board and a substrate or a package, the buildup process has been developed instead of the conventional soldering process. The buildup process is conducted by means of using an adhesive between the electronic circuit board and a substrate or a package. The assembly
