However, smoking meat produces flavour using smoke which provides a desirable alternative. Meat that is either smoked or cooked is expensive, especially if it is smoked over an extended period of time. Smoking meat generally means cooking the meat under a smoking atmosphere until it is cooked. In the smokehouse, smoke generally consists of fine wood dust, charcoal chips, wood chips, and the like, which is referred to as 'smoke' in this application. Smoke commonly contains about 50% to 80% moisture content, and the smoke is generally generated at the site of use. Smokehouses provide for the passage of air over the smoke to circulate the smoke through the smokehouse and provide fresh air to the smoke. The smoke usually passes over a radiant heat source and through a heat exchange system. The present invention is directed to the problem of providing a means for smoking food. Degree of smoking is determined by smoke moisture content and not the method of
